THE MEEK FAMILY HISTORY

This work is the result of thirty years of re-search from many sources, such as old family bibles, and records, tombstones, cemetery records, U.S. Census, county and state records, printed books on the family history, and from statements by the oldest members of the family.

Every effort has been made to verify facts by comparing statements from two or more sources when possible and a careful record kept of these authorities and their sources.

Genealogy is progressive and is never completed. For this reason such a work should be carefully indexed and proper authority shown, so that succeeding generations can continue the work. A special effort has been made in this direction; a complete file is being kept of all correspondance that has been used as authority in one file, numerical filed corresponding to the index of authorities used, and all others alphabetically filed, and a card index with all names and information shown in the index in this book.

In many valuable genealogies it is almost impossible to follow any given family through from one generation to another down through the years. After a careful study the present writer has devised a cut back, overlapping leaf chart which can be opened up so that the complete record of any family shows without turning a single leaf.

The original manuscript, with the same numbers from which this chart has been compiled shows our authority for every statement made, and can be referred back to at any time.

You may wonder about the names not being consecutively numbered. This came about from the fact that a number of years ago we made up this chart, numbering the names as we obtained information on them. It was not thought advisable to change these numbers as they run back through all our correspondance and indexes, and could not be referred back to and re-checked if they were changed. Some of these letters are a hundred years old, one written home by a Civil War soldier, and many are fifty to seventy-five years old, coming from all parts of the United States, and as far away as Australia.

Author 4 75-11
8/15/64

In all England there is not a prettier stretch of country than that embraced by the boundries of Lincolnshire. On the north the broad river Huber glides swiftly to the sea, separating the shire of York from that of Lincoln, while the eastern shores are washed by the North Sea.

Although tilled for hundreds of years, yet the land to-day yields generously to the hand of man, and it's hills and valleys are dotted with old stone houses and barns which bespeak the goodness of nature and the thrift and energy of its people.

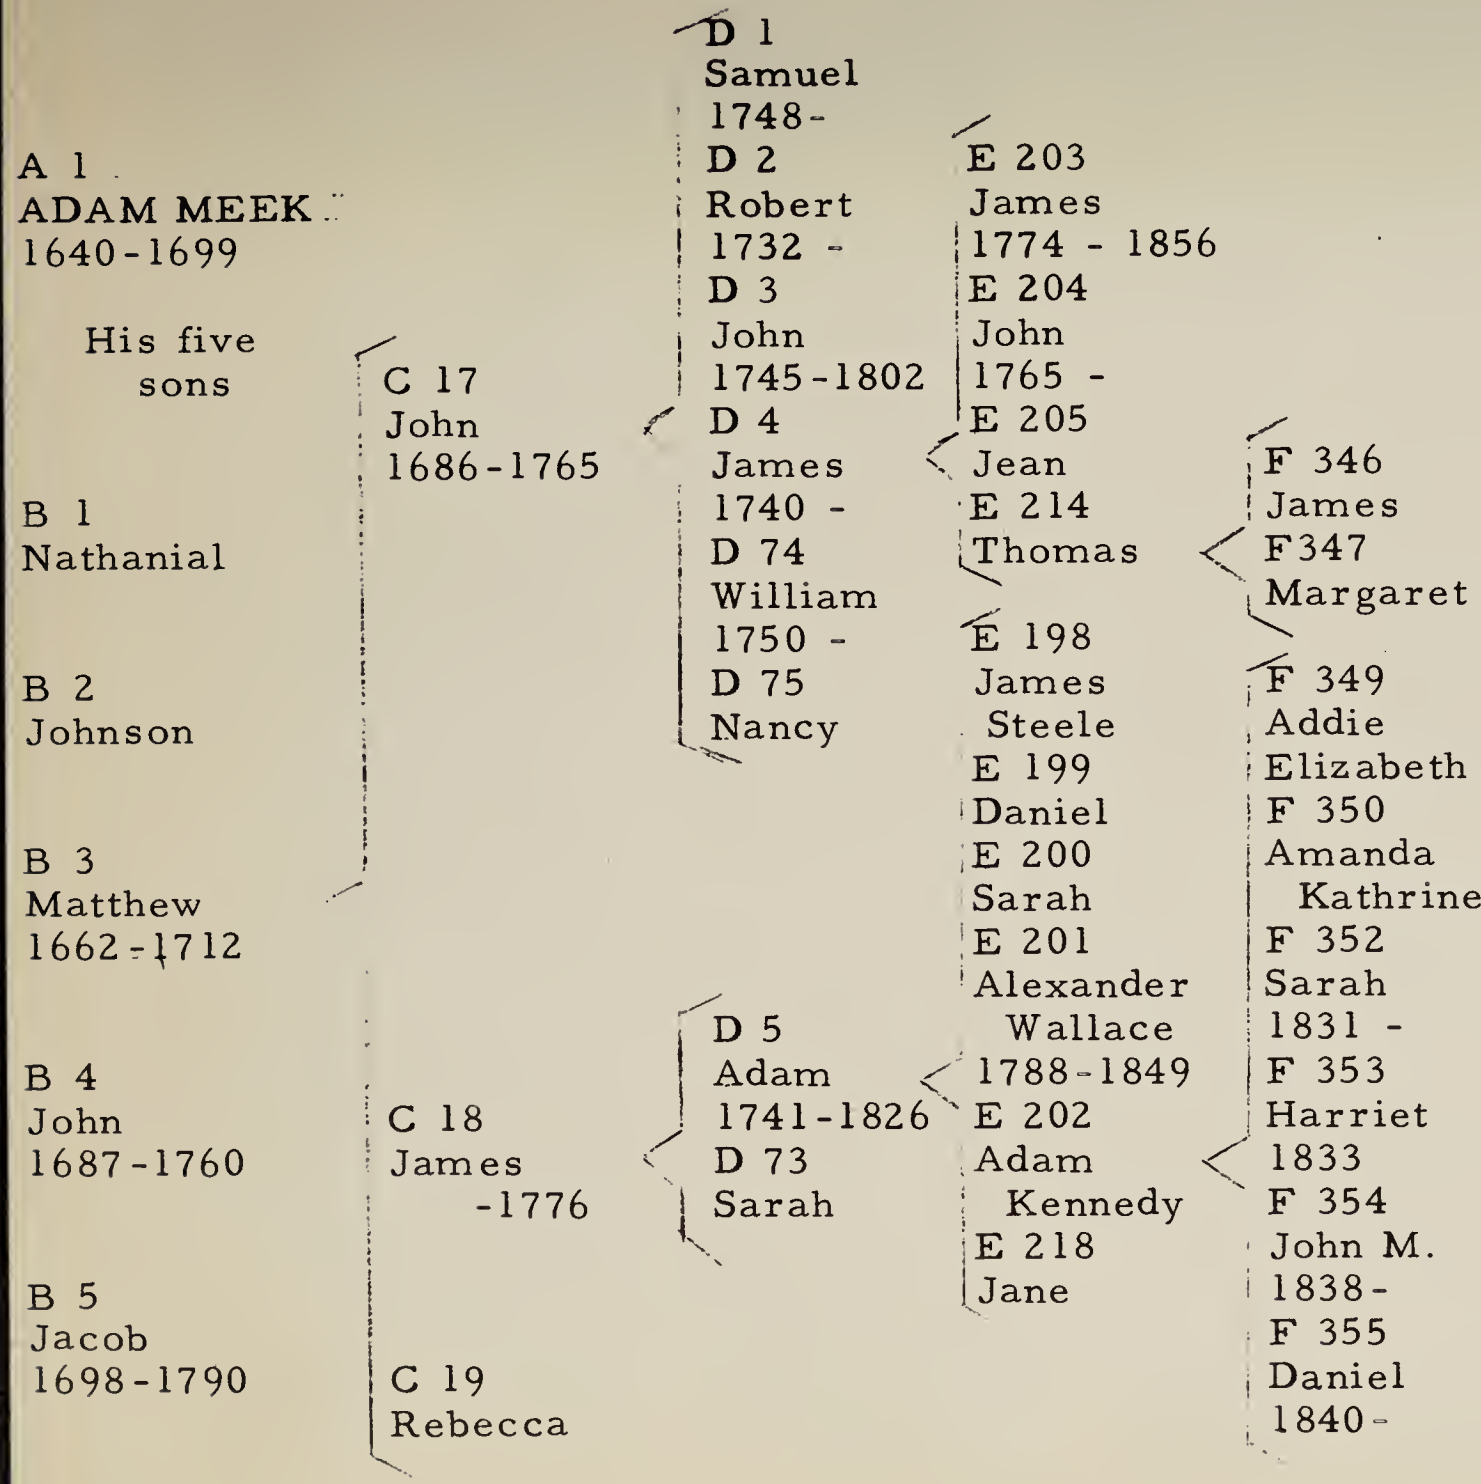
A greater part of Lincolnshire is level, but in the northern part are found hills, or wolds as they are called there, which afford a fine view of the country round about, and add greatly to the picturesqueness of the country. The ruins of an old church, built in 1120, also adds interest to the shire, and there are quite a number of churches, which though built several hundred years ago, are still in good state of preservation.

Here in this garden spot of England, a veritable Eden, was the home of Adam Meek, the primo-genitor of the within named people. While we find the name Meek mentioned in English history as far back as the twelfth century, this Adam was the first from whom we can show a direct descent.

It will be remembered that our Pilgrim Fathers came from this same neighborhood only a few years before Adam Meek was born, so it is reasonable to think that they were friends and neighbors, and possibly relatives of the Meek family of Anglo-Saxon origin.

When Adam Meek grew to manhood he married a Miss Johnson, who was also of Anglo-Saxon descent. She was born about 1645. They were married about 1661. They lived here their entire lives.

There in the land of his birth we will leave Adam Meek to his long rest in the little churchyard beside the old stone church, and as the white chalk cliffs of old England fade from our sight let us bow our heads in reverence to his memory.



MEEK-O-GRAPH CHART

This cut-back and overlapping chart has been devised by your author in such a manner that the direct lineage of any one whose name appears can be traced back to Adam Meek, born 1640 without turning a single leaf.

Each family is enclosed in a bracket with the arrow pointing to their father.

Each name is found in the alphabetical index where more information can be found.

Or first find the name desired in the index, note the chart and page number, then refer to this chart.

We have no record of Adam Meek's first two sons other than their names.
Matthew married and moved to Ireland where he remained the remainder of his life.
His children married there, thus giving this branch of the family an Irish strain.
His son John, born in Lock Lorn Co. Ire. married Elizabeth Mitchell. He died in 1765, and his widow emigrated to America with her children in 1774 and settled at "96" Laurens Dist. So. Car.where she died.
Matthew's son James died enroute to America about 1776.
His daughter Rebecca came to America about 1776 and married a Mr Kennedy.
From this branch of the family came some of the most noted and scholarly men of the South, including able attorneys; one Att'y Gen. of Ala.;one Prof.of Latin and Greek,others in State Legislature; also Doctors and Ministers.

ORIGIN OF

OREGON'S BIG RED APPLE

We have all heard of Johnny Appleseed who planted apple seed where ever he stopped on his way west, but did you ever hear of the more important role the Meek Family had in the development of the nationally known Williamette Valley, Oregon fruit industry?

It all came about in this way.

In 1837 William Meek and his sons William,Robert,Isiah, and Joseph came from Michigan to southeast Iowa seeking a suitable stream for water power. (see Meek Genealogy) This they found on the Des Moines River, and by a special act of the legislature they were permitted to dam the river. They built a saw mill, flour mill, and woolen mill,increased their land holdings from 360 acres to over 1,000 acres, raised several thousand head of sheep to supply wool for their woolen mill, and shipped completed garments all over the east, and trousers shipped to England were declared to be among the finest made. The village which sprung up around the mill was first called Meek's Mills, but later they laid out a town site and renamed it Boneparte.

During this time Henderson Lewelling moved his nursery stock from Indiana to Salem, Iowa, just a short distance from Boneparte and became acquainted with the Meek family. His nursery prospered and it has been stated that apples grown from trees from this nursery were shipped all over eastern Iowa.

But Lewelling got the Oregon Fever, and since he had succeeded in moving his nursery stock once he now got the idea of moving it to Oregon. So in the Spring of 1847 he built two heavy boxes, loaded them on a heavily constructed wagon, and into the boxes packed 700 trees and shrubs in soil and charcoal. To this wagon he hitched three yoke of oxen and started to Oregon by way of St.Joseph, Mo. which was the only safe crossing over the Missouri River at that time. Traveling at the rate of about fifteen miles per day, they crossed the river and headed north into Nebraska, and west along the Platte River on the route known as the Oregon Trail. Many of these wagons came up the Old Ridge Road as far as Nebraska City, then headed west on what was known as the Nebraska City Cut Off.

Years later a house was built on this Ridge Road nine miles south of Nebraska City, and was known as the Nine Mile House, being the only house on the road between Nebraska City and a village twenty miles south, later known as Auburn, Nebr.

Many years later your writer was born in this same house, and it is quite likely that it was over this same hill that the slow plodding oxen had hauled the fruit trees so many years before.

All summer long they journeyed ever westward over what was then known as the Great American Desert.

Little did they think that a hundred years later great fields of waving corn, a great part irrigated and yielding one hundred bushels and more per acre would have almost obliterated their deep wagon ruts and that historians would find trouble tracing the route to place Old Oregon Trail Markers.

The oxen began to give out and Lewelling was urged to abandon his foolish idea of hauling those trees into this great wilderness, but if he had been easily discouraged he would not have been there.

Finally on October lst. they reached The Dalles on the Columbia River. The last trek from Fort Hall to the Columbia River was made over the trail on which Joe Meek had hauled the first wheeled vehicles just seven years before.

Here they loaded their goods, and of course the trees, onto boats and floated down the river to the Upper Cascades. They did not dare to attempt to run the rapids with these heavily loaded boats, so they unloaded everything and hauled all their goodsoverland to below the rapids, letting the empty boats shoot the rapids and catching them below, where they reloaded and floated down to the Lower Cascades where the portage had to be done all over again. Reloading they finally arrived at Portland in the late Fall, where the family stayed in East Portland the first Winter while Lewelling scouted around to find a suitable place for his nursery, finally locating at Milwauke, Ore. where he brought his family and nursery stock in the Spring.

Here he formed a partnership with William Meek who had come from Boneparte, Iowa the same Summer, but by a different wagon train. Since Salem and Boneparte were just a short distance apart, and since every one for many miles came to Meek's Mills to trade, no doubt these men were well acquainted before coming west.

They cleared the ground of a forest of large fir trees, planted their nursery, and also built a saw mill and flouring mill, with which Meek had experience in Iowa.

Later Meek bought out Lewelling's interest and operated the nursery for years, selling trees all over the Williamette Valley.

So it can be said that William Meek was the father of the Oregon fruit industries.

The next time you bite into a big red Oregon apple remember how you are indebted to the Meek Family.

Now that you have studied this little book you cannot help but marvel at the vast amount of information condensed in these few pages.

Your family pride will swell within your breast as you point out your own Revolutionary War ancestor among the score and more of these noble patriots, together with a host of sturdy long lived pioneers who, ever pressing westward, helped to develop our great mid-west, and the American Way of Life which you and I enjoy today.

In this work very little effort has been made on the last fifty years, confining out work more especially to the older and more difficult records.

Wouldn't you like to do your bit towards a more complete record by searching the census and other records of your locality and sending us this added information, together with a complete history of your own family down to date.

I have further information on quite a number of persons who's names appear on the chart, often of special interest to the immediate family. I will be glad to share this, without charge to any purchaser of this book. Just mail me your request with a self addressed stamped envelope.

All new information will be carefully preserved in my correspondence file, and all new names, with information on each, will be given a chart number and added to my card index.

This I hope to hand down to some one of the coming generation who is interested in continuing this work.

Yours truly,

Dear Kinsman:

Our new MEEK FAMILY HISTORY is ready for delivery. Since publishing my last book several years ago I have learned a great deal more about the family history, and have also learned how to make a better book.

This book has good quality stiff covers, printed (not duplicated) on good quality heavy ledger paper, and with a complete index. Following the introductory pages, and a page showing our English Coat Of Arms, with description by Burke, considered best of the published heroldic authorities, is my now well known Meek-o-graph chart of the descendants of Adam Meek, born in Lincolnshire, England in 1640, now numbering about 2,000.

I have devised this chart with cut back and overlapping leaves in such a manner that the direct lineage of every one whose name appears can be traced back to Adam Meek without turning a shingle leaf.

Following the chart is an alphabetical index with each name followed by its chart and page number, (making it easy to find on the chart) and all the vital statistics available, and other information, with a short biographical sketch of many of the more prominent members of the family.

In thirty years of research, without thought of profit, I have traveled in every State in the Union, but this has all been charged off as vacations.

Now, since I have typed all the copy for the printers, collated all the sheets for the binders, done all other work connected with the publishing, and handled all correspondence and am wrapping and mailing the books myself, I am able to hold the cost within the means of every one interested.

This is probably my last publication. It is copyrighted, and limited to the number of copies I am sure I can sell. When these are gone there will be no more -- ever.

You may mail your check or it can be sent C.O.D.

It's all yours for $4.75, postpaid.

Yours truly,

Carleton L Meek
